Setting up multiple wireless speakers can be an absolute pain. If you pick up a few Sounddots, that doesn't have to be the case. Simply place the speakers next to each other—or stack them—and they automatically pair and adjust their audio output to give you the best experience. The modular system grows with your audio needs, be it starting with a simple soundbar setup with three units, taking one with you on the go, or creating a literal wall of sound with dozens linked together. Starting at $299The Megablast and the Megaboom 3 have a lot in common: They're both waterproof, have long-lasting battery life, offer 360-degree sound with plenty of bass, and are available in a bevy of striking colors. It's just that the Megaboom 3 is more or less a traditional Bluetooth speaker, whereas the Megablast will connect to WiFi and packs Alexa inside. If you're searching for a better-sounding Echo, look no further—just don't forget to grab one of Ultimate Ears' charging bases for always-on voice controls. To get audio to multiple speakers, use an app such as AmpMe, Bose Connect, or a few from Ultimate Ears, as well as Bluetooth 5, which send audio to two devices at once. Instructions in this article apply to Bluetooth speakers connected to Android, Amazon Echo, or Google Home devices. There are a few apps that connect multiple Bluetooth devices, including AmpMe, Bose Connect, and Ultimate Ears. AmpMe is the most versatile, as it's not brand-specific, while the Bose and Ultimate Ears apps require the respective company's Bluetooth speakers. AmpMe syncs smartphones and Bluetooth speakers together to stream audio from SoundCloud, Spotify, YouTube, or your media library. Users can create or join parties on any of these platforms, and sync with unlimited devices. (Visit AmpMe's website to learn more about the app's features.) Your smartphone can only connect to one speaker, so you'll need participation from friends and family to make it work. The person who creates the party controls the music, but other users can send song requests using the app's chat feature. The host can also turn on the Guest as DJ feature, which lets other participants add songs to the queue. After you download the app, link it to either your Facebook or Google account, then see if any of your contacts are on AmpMe, or turn on location services and find a party near you. To start a party: Tap the Plus (+). Select the service (Spotify, YouTube, etc.), then tap Connect. Tap Connect. Log in to your account. Choose or create a playlist. Invite people to your party who can join remotely, or invite them over. With the Bose Connect and Ultimate Ears apps, you can pair a smartphone with two speakers each, but only on particular models. Bose Connect works with Bose speakers and headphones, and a Party Mode feature streams audio to two headphones or two speakers at once. Download Bose Connect for iOS or get the Android Bose Connect app: the app pages list compatible devices. Ultimate Ears has two apps that stream audio to multiple speakers: Boom and Roll, which correspond to compatible speakers. These apps have a feature called PartyUp that connects over 50 Boom 2 or MegaBoom speakers together. If you have a Samsung Galaxy S8, S+, or newer model, take advantage of the company's Bluetooth Dual Audio, which works with most Bluetooth speakers and headphones; Bluetooth 5 isn't required. Samsung To enable this feature: Go to Settings > Connections > Bluetooth. These steps apply to Samsung devices running Android 8 and higher. The settings options layout may look a little different depending on your version. Tap Advanced. In earlier Android versions, tap the three dot menu in the upper-right corner. Turn on the Dual Audio toggle switch. To use Dual Audio, pair the phone with two speakers, two headphones, or one of each, and audio will stream to both. If you add a third, the first paired device will be booted off. If you link your Samsung with two sets of headphones, only the first connected device can manage playback using on-headphone media controls. You may also encounter Bluetooth speakers that are out of sync, so this feature is best for speakers located in separate rooms. Apple has a similar feature to Samsung's Dual Audio called HomePod Stereo Pair that allows users to pair an iPhone or Mac with two HomePod speakers. To set up a HomePod Stereo Pair, you need an iPhone running at least iOS 11.4 or a Mac with macOS Mojave or later. You'll also need HomePod speakers running iOS 11.4 or later. When you set up a HomePod in the same room as another one, you'll get an option to use the speakers as a stereo pair. You can also use the Home app to set up this feature on an iPhone, iPad, iPod touch, or Mac. In either case, both HomePods must be in the same room to pair them. Open the Home app, double-click or press and hold HomePod, then click or tap Settings. Click or tap Create Stereo Pair. Select a second HomePod. You'll see two HomePod icons in the app. Tap or click a HomePod to map it to the correct channel (right and left). Click or tap Back, then Done. Need more speakers to connect and make your home a music mecca? There are plenty on the market these days; definitely shop around to get the best deal but be sure you're also getting volume and fullness of the music you want, too. FAQ Can I connect my iPhone to other Bluetooth speakers if I don't have a HomePod? Yes, with the help of third-party apps. Visit the App Store and search for apps that connect iPhones to various Bluetooth devices; read reviews and choose a quality product that works for you. Another option is to use AirPlay-enabled speakers. How do I connect Google Home to Bluetooth speakers? How can I improve the sound from multiple connected speakers? Thanks for letting us know!
